Department of Health Encourages Women to Make Their Health a Priority during Women's Health Week

BISMARCK, N.D. – During National Women's Health Week, May 12-18, 2013, the North Dakota Department of Health would like to remind women to make their own health a priority.

National Women's Health Week is coordinated by the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services and is dedicated to raising awareness of women's health issues. The week begins on Mother's Day each year. During this week, individuals, families, communities, and others work to help women learn how to achieve longer, healthier and safer lives. Women's Health Week is a celebration of women taking responsibility for their own health and improving awareness of key women's health issues.

Women often serve as caregivers for their families – putting the needs of their spouses, partners, children, and parents before their own. Women's Health Week works to empower women to make their own health a priority as well.

“Women's Health Week is a great time for women of all ages to step back and think about ways they can make their lifestyle healthier,” said State Health Officer Terry Dwelle, M.D. “It's important to remember that we can't take care of others, if we don't take care of ourselves first. I encourage all North Dakota women to take steps for a longer, healthier and happier life.”

The top health risks for women include heart disease, cancer and stroke. Although these are serious concerns, there is good news. Making healthy lifestyle choices can go a long way towards reducing these health risks. Women are encouraged to take the following steps to improve their physical and mental health and lower their risk of certain disease:
